

ALISA HAREWOOD

With over 16 years' within strategy, sales, delivery, operations and change management, Alisa has extensive global experience & cultural awareness which has been gained by having worked in 8 countries across 4 continents.

Alisa worked her way from entry level to the executive leadership all without a university degree. Over the course of her career she has been, for the most part the only person of colour on many leadership teams.

One of her career highlights came in 2015 when she was appointed the Vice President of North America Managed Services division for a global engineering and design company TATA Technologies. This saw Alisa become the first female and person of black ethnicity to lead a sales and delivery function and hold a seat on any global senior leadership team in the company's 25 year history.

Alisa then went on a 4 year journey where she had to fight and overcome depression and anxiety due to sudden loss of her husband.

Today Alisa is the founder and managing director of We-R-One a consultancy that believes that Equality + Empowerment = Advancement for all. By helping organisations understand how they can create a culture of inclusivity in order for all people to thrive.

Her mission is to change the narrative around race relations and gender equality by encouraging people to get comfortable with having uncomfortable conversations so that we can create solutions and make long term sustainable #changethatmatters.

Today Alisa is using her experiences both professionally and personally to inspire and empower other women as a coach who empowers and inspires women to develop and embrace the multifaceted roles that they have to play in society by ensuring they dedicate time for their own spiritual and personal development.
